Maxons Restorations launches Eye of The Storm™ Online Project Management System.

NEW YORK CITY – Manhattan-based Maxons Restorations has announced the launch of "Eye of the Storm" (EOTS) Online Project Management system, an "Industry-first" online system that allows insurance adjusters to efficiently manage and monitor complex disaster restoration projects in real time, right from their desktops. "'Where has this been all my life?' is the most common reaction that I get from my clients," says Damon Gersh, the president of Maxons. "This is another example of how Maxons understands our clients' needs," adds the 2003 Ernst & Young Entrepreneur of the Year award winner.

The EOTS system was developed by Maxons based on its extensive experience and understanding of the issues its insurance industry clients face. EOTS acts as a central portal for all parties involved in a restoration project. It creates an online interface to access project photos, cost estimates, scope of damage and other mission-critical information within 24 hours of the disaster event. During the project, the system acts as a single repository for all information and communications relating to that loss. With EOTS, insurance adjusters, property owners and managers as well as Maxons project teams all have immediate access to the information needed to make key decisions efficiently and cost effectively.

By creating a 100% secure, password-protected system that is completely free to use, Maxons has significantly reduced decision-making and process times while improving efficiency and information sharing. "This revolutionary system's only mission is to make our clients' lives easier. In this crowded, highly competitive business, EOTS sets us apart in a positive, meaningful way," concludes Gersh.
